

ASIAN HISTORY

This series seeks to capture the dynamic field of early-modern and modern Asian history. The series encompasses intellectual, cultural, and political histories, broadly defined, covering the period 1500 to 2000. We aim to publish both work on particular localities and trans-regional studies of mobility, connections, and communication across Asia.

Proposals Welcomed

We particularly welcome proposals based on rigorous and innovative interdisciplinary work. The series will be principally comprised of monographs, but will also include occasional, high-quality edited collections and anthologies. Proposals based on substantially re-worked PhD theses are welcome.
